Hello Barb

I would like to welcome you as my Guest for another Episode of Family Caregivers Unite, VoiceAmerica's successful internet radio talk show, of which I am the host. This would be a follow-up to your powerful Episode 193, "I am only a Mom Caring for Autism".

Here's the link to it in the on-demand library.

The title I'm tentatively using is "Who cares for Children, Adolescents and Adults Living with Autism?". It reflects the mounting interest in autism and the expressed concerns about care available for and provided to children, adolescents and adults.

If you agree, I will schedule the Episode and then work with you on the content as we did before.

I would very much like you to be my Guest because of your communication skills. These enable you to clearly express information useful for a wide audience of family and professional caregivers. Your information is especially useful because of your analytical skills which enable you to provide answers to questions that you know reflect the challenges experienced widely in your audience.

I value the ways you authenticate yourself for your audience by sensitively and informatively telling your own story of your own experience. Your listeners are then able to recognise your understanding of the challenges they face, of the help they need, of the ways they provide care, and of the difficulties they experience in getting the help they seek.

Your experience in synthesizing information and ideas is recognizable when you talk about the things you want to do and see done by the medical profession to help family caregivers. And your ability to distill information is evident in your message to family-caregiver Moms caring for children living with autism.

Please do accept my invitation. If you would like to share this email with anyone who might be interested please do so.

All good wishes

Gordon
